

Evidence-Based Academic Writing Improvement

Turning Unsupported Claims into Research-Driven Arguments

Strong arguments require strong evidence. Skyline Academic helps students transform weak, descriptive writing into persuasive, evidence-based research aligned with university standards.

Case Overview

Before Coaching

Unsupported Generalizations

“Afforestation, mangroves, and CCUS can offset Bahrain’s emissions and help achieve sustainability.”

Tutor Comments (Before)

Over-broad solution list; no feasibility limits or integrity safeguards.

No MRV, additionality, or cost considerations; cites few primary sources.

Reads as advocacy, not evaluation

After Coaching

Evidence-Driven Policy Analysis

“In arid conditions, nature-based options deliver resilience but modest carbon gains without strong MRV and suitable species/water strategies; high-integrity offsets should prioritize verifiable local pipelines (industrial efficiency, methane abatement) aligned with international transparency standards (UNFCCC, 2015). CCUS is technically plausible for refinery/power clusters but remains capital-intensive and infrastructure-dependent, warranting cautious pilot-first deployment (Carton, 2019).”

Tutor Highlights (After)

Distinguishes resilience co-benefits from carbon outcomes; specifies MRV and integrity needs.

Prioritizes near-term, measurable abatement over speculative offsets.

Balanced CCUS appraisal with cost/infrastructure caveats and pilot logic.

Coaching Impact

The student learned:

How to find and evaluate peer-reviewed sources.

How to connect theory with practical policy implications.

How to construct research-driven, credible arguments.

Outcomes

Paper grade improved from 62% to 80%, with praise for “depth of research and critical balance.
